CHIPS Civilian Health and Infectious-Disease Public Service

Private, volunteer-based, and FREE to the Public

Working in collaboration and cooperation with CDC, WHO, and state/local health and social service agencies

<http://chips.tetradyn.net>

Growing & working for the help of non-pharma information, assistance and referrals for the Public, in part by the volunteerism of people from social networks like Facebook, YouTube and others.

Now, related to this is the more scientific, technical, and directly medical works, not only for H1N1 but focused on this pandemic, and addressing also other infectious diseases and biothreats for public health and the food supply:

CRAIDO Community Rapid Response for Infectious-Disease Outbreaks

Mobile and stationary labs and information-stations, but the mobile ones are what are of special interest to You. These will be soon in towns and cities providing rapid testing and diagnoses, but also information, guidance, referrals, pointers, and help to people who want it and need it. Moreover, CRAIDO and the rest of what is known as the CUBIT Suite of bioprotection and Biothreat avoidance, diagnosis, response and care, is not just about H1N1, not just about the flu, but also about food safety, and other threats and concerns we all share about the environment, the “bugs” and the threats of crime to especially our youth and women.
